CLOSING THOUGHTS

CLOSING THOUGHTS ON THIS PUPPY

The VP has been the slowest to meet milestones out of the group. She was not approaching or interacting with humans until about 5-6 weeks. She is still timid but is significantly better than previous breeder evaluations. There is no concern on her temperament but she should be placed in a household who is committed to building her confidence in the puppy and adult stages. A puppy like this typically bonds incredibly well with their family. Socialization is extremely important over the first 6 months with both humans and animals. If this does not occur you will be met with behavior problems in the long term, or possible a dog who just doesn't care to socialize outside of her family. Dogs who are lower confidence will not have problems with basic command training and will usually be very good and easy pups. The VP will be a good dog for a first time dog owner who needs a lower energy and lower drive dog. I would avoid a high energy or on the go type household for this puppy.
